

Economic Resilience by Design

Caring for one another and the home we share

A resilient economy is:

- By necessity inclusive. Every member of every community able to participate and benefit.
- Pragmatic. Respects the interdependent relationship of people and ecosystems that sustain life.
- Designed to deliver health and well-being and capture carbon
- Regenerative. An effective tool for managing energy (food and water)
- Local and legacy driven- capable of serving future generations

We are at a crossroads. It is time to act. The Headwaters Community Food & Water Bill takes our circumstances seriously-creating the inclusive economy we need to face the climate challenge together and the tools we need to shape it. (HF2738)
